ABSTRACT

This reference volume shows the educational certificates, diplomas and degrees and required documentation for various levels of higher education study in nations around the world other than the United States. Organized first by country with the countries listed alphabetically, the information is presented in columns with the first column listing the major levels of study in U.S. higher education (undergraduate and graduate) and subdivisions (freshman and transfer at the undergraduate level, masters and doctoral degrees at the graduate level); the second column listing the degree from the individual nation that corresponds to the specific U.S. educational level; and column 3 listing supporting documentation required to accompany the certificates, diplomas, and degrees described. Preface

This is the fourth, and expanded, edition of Foreign Educational Credentials Required for Consideration of Admission to Universities and Colleges in the United States. The original purpose of this publication, in its earlier editions, was to assist U.S. Agency for International Development Overseas Mission staff members and cooperating country personnel in determining the minimum academic records which should accompany the documentation of participants proposed for study in U.S. universities and colleges. Since its initial introduction in 1981 this publication has proven a valuable resource for foreign student admissions officers in U.S. institutions, since it indicates, in a convenient and consistent form, the educational credentials which should be available for applicants from each of the countries contained in the publication.

This report does not represent an official U.S. government position on the evaluation of foreign educational documents, nor does it represent agreements between the U.S. and any of the educational systems listed. It does represent the prevailing opinion and considered judgement of experienced foreign student admissions officers in U.S. colleges and universities. The section entitled "Suggestions for Use" gives guidelines for users of the publication.

We are deeply indebted to G. James Haas, Associate Director for Foreign Admissions, Indiana University - Purdue University at Indianapolis, who served as editor of the second, third, and the fourth editions of this publication, as well as contributed to the content. Lydia C. Salonga of the University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign coordinated the preparation of the publication and was assisted by D. Michele Tarter. Jill Ross and Karl D. Ruffin, Administrative Assistants for the AACRAO-AID Project / Office of International Education Services, also contributed to the preparation of this manuscript.

Without the leadership, advice, and guidance of Miss Hattie Jarmon, former Education Specialist, Academic Advisory Service, Office of International Training, U.S. Agency for International Development (now retired), this publication and its preceding editions would not have existed. It is our hope this latest edition meets the standards originally established by Miss Jarmon during her long career with USAID. Hattie contributed immeasurably to the field of foreign credentials evaluation, and we hope that this edition continues in that tradition.

When a U.S. university or college reviews the dossier of a foreign applicant, many items are taken into consideration. The most significant item is the previous academic background of the applicant. The level of the programs followed, the content of the subject matter, the quality of the student's achievement, the breadth and depth of study, and the time normally required for completion of a program should all come under review. It is, therefore, essential that all relevant educational certificates, degrees, and diplomas be presented along with supporting documents that show the individual subjects studied and the marks or grades received. Although all countries do not routinely issue transcripts similar to those found in the U.S., this type of information can usually be obtained if requested. Most U.S. institutions will not make admission decisions on the basis of certificates, degrees, and diplomas alone. The transcript portion of the record is also required.

The individual pages of this publication list credentials and other documentation that would be required for entry from a given country to a specified level of study. The country is identified in the upper left-hand corner of the page, and is followed by the three-digit AID identification number for the country. An individual applicant would need to have one or more of the documents listed for admission consideration. Secondary school completion documents should always be provided for those who may fall into the transfer student category. Besides being a sound administrative practice for better understanding the academic background of the student, chances for error are lessened in those situations where some secondary and postsecondary documents in a given country may have similar or identical names. All postsecondary documents should be provided for those who hope to gain admission at the graduate level.

Column (I) lists the two major levels of study in U.S. higher education: undergraduate and graduate. Each level is further divided: freshman and transfer at the undergraduate level; Master's and Ph.D. at the graduate level. Distinctions between entry to the Master's and Ph.D. level are sometimes difficult to make. Even in the U.S. situation students admitted to some majors are viewed as Ph.D. students no matter that they possess only a bachelor's degree at the time of admission. For purposes of this text, a Ph.D. entry level document represents a minimum of one fulltime year of study beyond a bachelor's equivalent. The study must also be viewed as advanced as opposed to supplemental. For example, in many countries teachers have a special option for obtaining their certification. They earn a first degree in a major area and then take a one year postgraduate diploma program in education. Much of this latter study would be akin to courses at the junior/senior level in the U.S. context. The latter type program in this text would be viewed as eligible for master's level entry.

Another category of degrees that show as eligible for master's level entry are the first professional degrees such as dentistry, medicine and veterinary science. While these frequently take more years than the standard bachelor's degree in the U.S., there is a heavy applied clinical component involved. Academically, they include no more theoretical study than most bachelor's degree programs. They are consequently listed as eligible for beginning graduate level work.

Several countries have doctoral programs that are known to be the equivalent of Ph.D. In these situations, the degrees have been listed under Section IIC - Unclassified/Special. This seems to make more sense than a) listing them under Section IIB and thereby implying they represent a lesser accomplishment or b) not noting their existence at all. Also listed under Section IIC are a few doctoral level programs that are too new to have been thoroughly evaluated against an all-world standard. For similar reasons as the foregoing they are also included in this category.

In column (II), the certificate, diploma and degree programs for admission to each level are specified. In column (III), supporting documentation required to accompany the certificates, diplomas, and degrees is described.

For programs that fall into the I(B) (undergraduate transfer) category on the lists, it is also desirable that syllabi of the programs be included with the dossier. While admission decisions can sometimes be made without the syllabi, the student's exact placement cannot logically be determined without this information.

The lists of certificates, diplomas, degrees, and supporting documents are not exhaustive in the case of many of the countries. Included are the most current and commonly seen documents. One should always exercise great care in assessing foreign academic credentials. In several countries, documents of the same name will appear at more than one level. To assist the reader in sorting these out, parenthetical remarks such as "earned after a three-year program" have been added. To minimize errors in making assessments a reviewer should take note of an applicant's birthdate to determine at what age a particular document was earned.

The latest information available has been used in preparing this publication. However, other new programs and documents may exist since changes are constantly occuring in the world's educational systems. Reviewers may also come across documents earned ten or fifteen years ago that are not included herein. A publication more pertinent to the period may need to be reviewed in such cases.

Copies of all academic documents should be certified. Two categories of guidelines have been utilized in the text in connection with certification: (1) Countries that normally issue their academic documents in English need only certify their usual copies; (2) Countries that do not claim English as their official language should be asked to provide certified copies of the original language documents, plus the certified English translations. Most of the countries fall into this second category. Copies in the original language are useful as a safety check on the translator for simple errors or for interpretive rather than literal translations (the latter can sometimes be quite misleading when grades or marks are "interpreted"). Eight countries have a mix of English and at least one other language as being "Official" for their academic documents; these eight carry a special notation.

The reader is reminded that there is no unanimity on the handling of all documents listed herein. Some institutions have the capacity to admit a student with deficiencies. Others are unable to extend this consideration. No one person or organization can or should prescribe the absolute admission standards for another institution. Each of us will bring to bear our own judgmental qualities to factors such as the applicant's age, maturity and experience. It is hoped that this publication will assist each institution to find the most equitable way to advance the educational level of the individual applicant while maintaining the integrity of institutional standards.

When complete academic documentation is presented, the admission decision process can be greatly expedited and the student's level of placement determined more accurately. Working toward the smooth transition of foreign students into the U.S. system is a worthy goal for all involved in international educational exchange.
